

Ronald Wendorf, Germany

For me freedom is the power of changing.

[It indicates to live in self-determination and to act. Freedom is a process and a challenge for the people. She needs every day new thoughts.]

The most important thing for me in 1989 was the fight for co-determination in peace and growing self-confidence.

[My homeland should not be an imitate of the West and the targets of the peaceful revolution of 1989 should not be covered by the impression, that the Eastern Bloc was shattered by peoples' greed of consumption. At risk of their lives, at least of their future, the people vouched for democracy, transparency and liberty. It were not the bananas, but the desire for a self-determined life and democracy, what lured them in front of the NPA-barriers.]

During the trip I'm going to collect new thoughts and friendship.

What I would like to share with others:

"Storifyproject:

The „Storify by ENES“ should be permanently on hand on your home page to stimulate artists and other participants to counterfeit historical sources themselves and to engage creatively in a fake battle by smart phones. Revolutionary combat by Snapchat!"

Born in 1983. Graduate of Master studies of Contemporary History and Ethnology on the University of Freiburg. He works at the university, as a tutor of the seminars mainly focused on the topic of Soviet Union, Poland and Eastern Germany history. In the terms of arts, he works as a documentary movie maker and producer. He created various documentaries, including biographic interview with Joachim Gauck, the German President.

Posted on August 19, 2014 by ENRS Team This entry was posted in Participants. Bookmark the permalink.